Annotation:

The submitted thesis is focused on the concept of human labour in the working of Saint Clara and related clarisses spirituality. For better orientation in the subject there are basic historic data from the life of Saint Clara of Assisi and from the history of Poor Clara's Order. Furthermore, this work briefly introduces the term of human labour from the aspect of anthropological sciences and philosophy and the concept of Magisterium, mainly in the documents Gaudium et spes and Laborem exercens. The fundamental part deals with the dignity of human labour within the clarisses and franciscans spirituality. The work is based on interpretation of testaments contained in the written sources from the 13th century. Additionally, the author briefly mentions evolution process of the concept of labour within the Order of Poor Clares, outlines subject of the servants – external sisters. Finally, the last chapter focuses on present theological-legal reflection of the term labour on the basis of council and following documents about nunhood (Perfectae caritatis, Venite seorsum Potissimum institutioni) and nowadays valid constitutions of clarisses and clarisses–capuchines and also about practical realisation of concept of labour in everyday life of present convents.
