

Abstract

The bachelor thesis is about the factors that affect the reintegration of homeless people into the majority society in the territory of the Prague capital. It consists of theoretical and practical parts. The theoretical part is dedicated to the explanation of the key concepts, the influence of everyday life on reintegration, transformation of the human being who is living on the street, as well as which individual and structural factors we can encounter most often. The practical part focuses on the problems that affect reintegration which I found out through qualitative semi-structured interviews with homeless people in Prague. The objective of the thesis is to uncover significant negative factors that may affect reintegration and to verify them through qualitative research.
