

The bachelor thesis deals with the problematics of homelessness with particular emphasis on the present situation in Prague. It's first part focuses on general description of this phenomenon, it's classification and the historical advancement. It also attends to the holders of this phenomenon, with regards to their personal and main psychological characteristics. The second part maps the present situation in the capital city. It also presents some organisations working with this type of clients. Two of these organisations and their working methods with the clients will be compared on base of the author's own experience. At the end, the bachelor thesis includes the author's own suggestions and recommendations leading to possible solutions of the issue.