PRIMARY PREVENTION based on the School Orientation Days within the course Good and Evil

The objective of my work is to familiarize, describe and consequently evaluate School Orientation Days in terms of the effectiveness of the projectes of primary prevention - the project of primary prevention which is based on multifarious and effective methods of the primarily preventive courses with a background of experiential education and clerical pillars. A particular part is dedicated to one of the courses named Good and Evil.

At my work I deal both with history of the antecedent of this project and the contrast of clerical activity and the activity realized in the field of primary prevention. Subsequently already aiming on the activities realised in Hradec Králové on the specific set objectives, proven methods, courses offered and consequently evaluation of their effectiveness.

The course Good and Evil has already been held at the bishop's residence in Hradec Králové since 1998. It is intended primarily for students at 1st and 2nd degree of secondary school, whereas prevention in this age should focus mainly to prevention of dependencies and solving difficult situations. The course blends activities directed to the value ladder of the young people, self-cognition and creating space of trust towards others. One of the great subjects of the course are critical situations and a wide spectrum of their solutions and also dependencies. The aim of the course is to invite reflections in terms of wide connections as well and there are also included activities that purposely create space for discussion over religious subjects. It is a two-day course and composed of several parts, mainly of experimental activities - plays and discussions, an important place in the programme fills reflection over experienced activites at the end of each part.

In this work I devote myself not only to the description of this course, but simultaneously to its evaluation both from the position of course makers, teachers and students and also from my own point of view. At the end of my work I devote myself to the reasons of the fruitfulness of the course. Further information to single data related to OD, particular activities, word evaluation done by the course participants, pedagogues and newspaper articles are included in the attachment section.
