„The Standing of Woman in the Society in the Perspective of the Old and New Testaments“

The principal points of the present thesis is the standing of woman in the society of Old and New Testaments.

The present thesis is not a strictly scientific work, for two main reasons: It was not possible to work in a real exegetical way without loosing the complex view of the given personality. And it stands at the crossroads of different branches of theology.

The aim of this thesis is to enlighten the lives of different women of the biblical times and to show that they may address the people of the present time, both women and men. The fact that the lives of men and women are intertwined shapes the history, including the history of salvation, as apostle Paul says in 1 Cor 11,11f.: “However, though woman cannot do without man, neither can man do without woman, in the Lord; woman may come from man, but man is born of woman – both come from God.” If we accept that God created man, his image, as male and female and gave them one task together, it cannot be different.
