

This bachelor's thesis deals with the topic of the family in relation to the attitude towards delinquency. The main purpose of the work is to find out the connection between the child's attitude towards delinquency and the family environment the child was raised in. Attitude towards delinquency is being explained by morality and the process of acquiring moral values during human's life. In the practical part I use the secondary data analysis. I test five hypotheses that relate to issues of the family environment and relate them to the attitude towards delinquency. The data comes from research focused on delinquency and victimization of youth in 9th grade of elementary schools and the corresponding grades of multi-year high schools.
