

Abstract (in English):

The aim of this diploma thesis is to describe the relationship of young Czechs to digital civic engagement. Using a questionnaire distributed via social media and in-depth interviews with individual activists, this work provides insight into how young adults in the Czech Republic use social networks to actively engage in civic discourse and socio-political issues. At the same time, the results of the conducted research offer reasons why young people are rather reluctant to get involved in digital activism. The thesis also contains a theoretical part that contextualizes the term citizenship, its models, and the specifics of the perception of citizenship in the digital age with specific examples of use. The final chapter contains a synthesis of theoretical knowledge of the investigated phenomenon together with the research results as well as topics for further discussion.
