The trinitary image of God in a man in the contemporary catechesis.

This treatise deals with the trinitary image of God in man in the contemporary catechesis. So the treatise is composed of two parts of the same extent. The first seeks the academic starting point, as far as the topic of the image of God in its trinitarian dimension is concerned, the second part analyzes then, how this topic is represented in the actual church catechetical documents. The texts of The Holy Scriptures of the Old and the New Testament are used in the first part, followed by its reflexion in the theological tradition. The treatise deals with the term persona in the theological context, with the elements of the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, above all with the trinitarian theories, so that it would be possible to have an idea of the Holy Trinity, resp. of its image – man and mankind. Then we turn to the man and we try to find the various aspects of the doctrine of the image of God. Some important catechetical documents of the church, both of the world and the local church, are analyzed on the ground of this doctrine (Evangelium nuntiandi, Catechesi tradendae, The General Catechetical Directory, Catechismus of the Catholic Church; The Catechetical Directives of the Conference of the Czech Catholic Bishops, the document of the Conference of the French Catholic Bishops On the Direction of the Contemporary Catechesis). The treatise ends with an attempt of an evaluation and a summary.
