

The architecture of university buildings in the '60s of the 20th century

The agricultural university in Prague

The bachelor thesis is aimed at premises of the Agricultural University in Prague-Suchbát. It thoroughly deals with a history of education in the agricultural branch and its anchoring to a university level, places where it was taught in the past and most significant personalities connected to the field. The following chapters are devoted to the contest for building up these extensive premises, which were the largest planned realization of the capital city in those times. The jurors rated overall 24 projects, that were given over and are introduced. These ratings are then presented together with ratings of the contest in a contemporary press and introduction of all the projects. Location of the premises and the victorious project by Jan Čejka are presented subsequently. I dealt there with the architecture, the technical description of the particular buildings and urbanistic solutions of the premises, also the newer realizations are presented. In the conclusion I attend to the original works of art that were preserved in the premises up to this day.
