

Annotation

German people displacement after the World War II as an ethical problem - getting over the past and the guilt in the announcements of organisations and groups expressing attitudes on the Czech-German relationship problems.

The displacement is more than 60 years discussed topic, which is still not properly solved. Working method „to see- to assess- to act“ could help us to get involved into the Czech-German relationship problems with a background of historical development, with sense of the guilty phenomenon, reconciliation principle and an awareness of attitudes of the groups dealing with this problems. On the basis of these aspects we can assess their getting over the past and guilt with future consequences.

background of Czech-German relationship perceiving the guilt

conversion

forgiveness

the future way