

The aim of this thesis is a translation of a part of chapter one of Michael Moss' „Salt, Sugar, Fat: How the Food Giants Hooked Us“ and the analysis and commentary of this translation. The commentary consists of four parts. Part one contains an analysis of the source text using the model of Christiane Nord. The second part deals with problems that occurred during the process of translation and their solutions. The third part describes the translation shifts and the fourth part deals with the chosen translation method.
