

Spectator violence committed during football matches is felt very inconsistently in the world. There are particularities of football violence in every country and each of them solves this problem in a different way, in its cultural and traditional context although the principle is the same - the elimination of dangerous fan groups.

Game, sport, football and the spectatorship have deep fundamentals in cultural and social rootage of human existence. Any play is natural part of life. The Football violence is social adverse behaviour and current science wants to solve its causes.

Our opinion is that the violence factors in football inhere in context of social life.

The Czech republic has gone through different political development than the West countries since the end of the World War II.. These differences have impact on football violence as well. In connexion with globalization effects the Czech football violence has the basic features like other countries where football is popular.
