

Abstract (in English):

The Bachelor's thesis is conceived as an applied research. The thesis primarily deals with czech soldiers who participated in foreign military mission and their relations with close people. The presented theoretical background is based on the psychological and sociological knowledge. The text represents these topics: military service, motivation, preparations of soldiers, the course of the mission, relationship development, returns from the mission and also a topic of the present supporting system in Czech republic for soldiers and needed war veterans. The empirical part of the thesis shows the quality research which finds out an effect of participating in foreign military missions on relations of czech soldiers with their family members and partners. The research uses in-depth interviews with soldiers and experts. In total, 14 interviewees were involved.